Some cast members played the role of Poet Maya Angelou by performing her renowned poems entitled "I Know Why the Caged

Bird Sings" and "Phenomenal Woman."

A trombone solo was performed to the tune of a famous hymn "Holy, Holy, Holy" with music by John B. Dykes. Another performed a poem entitled "Rise

Local Comedian Part of Guinness Stand-Up Effort

Beginning at noon on April 12, Nashville StandUp attempted to break the GUINNESS WORLD RECORDS™ title for “LONGEST STAND-UP COMEDY SHOW – MULTIPLE COMEDIANS” at The East Room in Nashville, Tenn.

This non-stop stand-up comedy marathon was an effort to put Nashville into the record books of comedy history. A GUINNESS WORLD RECORDS™ Adjudicator was on site to certify it as an official new world record on April 15, 2015, at 8:04 p.m. The comedians not only broke the previous 3.3-day/80-hour record, but they more than doubled the time of the record. The non-stop schedule featured showcases, feature-length and headliner-length sets and surprise drop-ins from comedians of various levels of fame and fortune.

One of the comedians on the lineup was local comedian Da

Spokesman (Gregory Stargell). Stargell stated, “It was an awesome experience. The crowd was great, and the comedians were a joy to work with. This experience not only made history but with this experience I believe everyone that participated is much better off as a comedian. This effort tested our abilities and helped us to push pass limits and barriers that we thought were impossible. I would like to thank the people who organized the event--Chad Riden, D.J. Buckley, Mary Jay Berger, and the Nashville Stand-up group--for the opportunity to be one of the performers on the historic lineup.”

Other comedians on the lineup included diverse comedians from the Nashville Standup Community, The Huntsville Standup Community, The Atlanta Standup Community, just to name a few.

Also, headliners like Hanibal Buress, Killer Beaz, and Eric Andre made a performance on this historic show. Nashville StandUp is a 509(a)(2) Public Charity with a mission to cultivate and promote middle Tennessee’s growing standup comedy scene by supporting the Nashville-based comedians that help make the Music City a great place to see live comedy.

From the Editor

I-10 West headed into New Orleans

Lake Pontchartrain

Port of New Orleans on The Mississippi River

This past week we had the opportunity to work in New Orleans, our first trip there since Katrina. Of course, it will never be the same, just as Harvest, Ala., is not the same since the April 27, 2011, tornado. This is a season of spring weather patterns, and we should make sure our various weather alerts are charged and workable, if needed. We actually stood in our kitchen window and watched entire roofs and sections of homes in our community fly through the air. We had a storm shelter and did not go out to get in it. When we look back at that day, it was just not our appointed day. Lives and homes were destroyed as we stood in the midst of waves of storms that lasted several hours prior to attacking our neighborhood, then disappearing in just a few minutes. When it passed, we went to the front door and could not believe it. Wow. Debris was everywhere, entire homes and buildings were gone, with no sign of where the people were. It was quiet, and the air was still. Giant trees in our yard were uprooted and sat on top of the earth like 'toothpicks.' April 27th brought people together from everywhere. Neighbors shared with each other what they had, including generators, water, clothes, food, gasoline, power, charcoal grills- you name it.

The Publix at Harvest Square allowed us to charge our mobile devices. Our next door neighbors, along with neighbors from surrounding communities, brought power saws, trash bags, food and other day-to-day necessities. The Harvest branch of Redstone Federal Credit Union opened its doors to law enforcement and emergency officials and served as sort of a disaster relief center. We took bottled water from our pantry to the site to share with emergency relief officials and people who came for assistance. Whatever we had, we wanted to help. A few days later, we found ourselves at the Harvest-Monrovia Community Center, signing up for help with our yard. County Commissioner Dale Strong provided leadership for a devastated community. Days passed and people came from local churches and universities with power saws, trash bags, water. They worked for hours until the biggest part of the job was conquered. Contractors from as far away as Ohio were making bids on removing debris, tree limbs and grinding stumps. It was overwhelming because even when we were able to generate power, we could not contact our family. We did not have land or cellular telephone service for days.

We were blessed. Other than broken window seals, a tree that landed on our garage door, dozens of uprooted trees and severe outside damage, the inside of our home was intact. We even had neighbors who stayed with us a couple of days and nights until they could return home. We went from home to home around dinner time, basically grilling what we had to share. We were several days without power before Mike and Janet Wood discovered that we did not have a generator and loaned us their extra one. Rest in Peace, Mike, you were always compassionate. Mike passed away after the storm. Mike and Janet, Russ and PJ Pry, Tommy Hooper, Rev. and Mrs. Nelson were true neighbors. Tommy Hooper was involved in a fatal accident several months after the storm. Rest in Peace, Tommy. We shared what food we had, yard and power tools; helped each other; looked out for each other's homes; and demonstrated the true meaning of what it means to be a 'neighbor.' Compassion was abundant! Between our neighbors and State Farm Insurance, we discovered quickly that we had everything we needed, without many of the amenities we take for granted each day.

Bill had had a fourth knee surgery and could barely watch the people as they helped to clean our yard. He was always a very physical guy who could move just about anything, fix just about anything, and would get it done. It was painful to watch him watch. Some of his former families from Challenger Elementary School were part of the cleaning teams that came to help. Small world. I even had a colleague, Lana Hargrove, from Redstone Arsenal who lived in Southern Tennessee who came by the house to bring us food. Dr. Parker Griffith and Maggie Willis came by with food and walked through the Anderson Hills community to check on families, giving out food. They could not contact us, but came because they knew the tornado had hit our neighborhood. Our State Farm Agent came by but, because our doorbell was not working, we missed him. We opened the door and Marshall England's business card was stuck in the door with a note. "Like a Good Neighbor" was more than a slogan or jargon to us. It was for real. We took the generator to my office in town, generated power and completed some work that I needed. Then I left for an overnight business trip to North Carolina that I could not cancel. Amazingly, I returned the next day to people who were still in the yard helping to clear the debris. It was unbelievable.

This is a long path to say how thankful we are for neighbors. Although Harvest will never be the same when we look at the landscape, neighbors will always be close to our hearts. It was good to be able to go over to Dillard University in NOLA, see the city bustling with ordinary and tourist traffic. The riverfront was very active. The memory of the April 27th tornado will always be vivid in our minds and so will the compassion of neighbors. With that, we are still here and very thankful ... Until next week,

Dorothy
