Washington in a Minute

Here are the main issues in Washington, D.C., for the week of November 6:

1. The House and Senate are in session this week. On Monday at 12 noon, the House Ways and Means Committee began a multi-day markup of the House GOP's tax reform bill, called the "Tax Cuts and Jobs Act." Committee Chair Kevin Brady (R-TX) has authored a substitute amendment – known as a "Chairman's Mark" – which will be the base document for amendments, in which he has made some significant changes from the text introduced last Thursday, including starting the inflation adjustments to the tax code immediately (instead of 2023), which will produce $128.2 billion in revenue for the federal government – an increase of $89 billion over 10 years. The House is aiming to complete floor debate on the tax bill before it recesses for Thanksgiving on November 16. The Senate Finance Committee is expected to consider its version of the tax bill next week. The full Senate this week will continue work on Trump Administration nominees, including a vote on former Lyft General Manager Derek Kan, who hails from California, to be Under Secretary of Transportation for Policy.

2. Higher education groups across the board are also seeking to avert the elimination of tax benefits for student loan borrowers and families paying for college that are worth roughly $65 billion over the next decade. The GOP bill would ax the deduction for interest paid on student loans as well as the tax break for employer-provided educational assistance programs.

3. President Trump is in Asia this week through November 14, traveling to Japan, South Korea, China, Vietnam, and the Philippines. While in Asia, he will participate in the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) meeting and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) summit. 4. Also on Monday, former Trump campaign manager Paul Manafort had a bail hearing at which time his defense team reportedly propose $12.5 million worth of assets – including his Trump Tower apartment – as part of a bail package to ensure that he appears for the trial he's facing on charges of money laundering and failing to register as a foreign lobbyist. In exchange for bail, Manafort is seeking to be released from home confinement and permitted to travel freely in Florida, Virginia, Washington, D.C., and New York. NBC News reported yesterday (Sunday) that Special Counsel Robert Mueller has obtained enough evidence to bring charges on President Trump's former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn and his son, Michael G. Flynn.

5. The Hill newspaper is reporting that House and Senate Democrats are uniting around the idea of forcing Congress to include language to preserve the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program in the FY2018 Omnibus Appropriations bill, thereby raising the chances of a federal government shutdown when the current funding stopgap measure expires on December 8. Another complication, according to Politico, may be the Treasury's announcement last week that the federal government will run out of money to pay its debts in January, delivering a slightly earlier estimate than expected, which could force appropriators to add a controversial provision on the debt ceiling to the Omnibus bill. Finally, Senators Alexander (R-TN) and Murray (D-WA) are pressing the Senate leadership to include in the Omnibus their bill to guarantee funds for 2 years for key Obamacare payments that reimburse insurers for discounts to low-income people, in exchange for added flexibility for states to apply for waivers to change Obamacare rules.

6. The Veterans Affairs Department said on Friday that it's moving ahead with implementing the bipartisan expansion of GI Bill educational benefits that President Donald Trump signed into law earlier this year. The VA said that many of the law's highest-profile provisions – like the removal of the 15-year limit on when recipients must use their GI Bill benefits – have already taken effect and don't require any action from student veterans.

Champion Game Plan for Life

by Preston Brown

Matthew 26:39 says, "Going a little further, He fell with His face to the ground and prayed, My Father, if it is possible, may this cup be taken from me. Yet not as I will, but as you will." Have you ever been caught between what you want and what God wants for your life? And, it was such a difficult decision that you wanted God to show you another way? You know, God gives us all certain assignments that He wants us to complete. Just like we find with Jesus. This was a very difficult decision, but aren't you glad that Jesus chose to complete His assignment? Because, where would we be if He had not become the savior of the whole world?

Now some assignments are easier to handle, like getting a new job or deciding to be a coach for your son's football team. However, some assignments are more difficult, like planting a church or going into ministry or being a "caretaker" for an elderly person.

So, whatever assignment God has given to you, I pray that you complete your assignment. I also pray that His will be done for your life. Even if we have to struggle, I pray that God gives you the strength to struggle. And, even if you have to endure some pain, God give us the strength to endure the pain. And, even if we have our doubts, like Jesus did, God give us the strength to overcome our doubts ... Stay encouraged, my brothers and sisters!

The Blessing in Breaking Millennial Thought

by Joshua Baker

While we are often taught to bend but never break, I have found a significant beauty in the process of breaking.

While I do not attempt to nullify this age-old adage, I seek to shed light on a new perspective. Breaking is not always entirely a bad thing.

While society has come to synonymize breaking with weakness, acknowledging a need to break is actually one of the strongest things a person can do.

In order to live a full life, we must constantly seek to expand our level of self-awareness. You owe yourself the truth. You owe yourself authenticity. You owe yourself the best version of you possible. That best version doesn't always present itself through adding on to what's already there. Sometimes, it lies in starting over.

At certain times in our lives, simple repairs will not suffice. It is only through tearing down and rebuilding that we obtain the complete breakthrough that we so vitally need. Allow yourself to receive what blessings await.

We often guilt ourselves into believing that we are not worthy enough to demand more. We present ourselves a false dilemma that all we have is all that there is. We deceive ourselves by believing that all we are now is all that we will be. It is never too late to begin the journey of living your best life.

You reserve the right to break apart and rebuild.

While it can be a scary experience, the outcome will prove well worth it. In the process of breaking, what is lost allows room for what needs to be gained. In the rebuilding phase of life, you are being made stronger and more prepared to walk in the fullness of your purpose.

There is a great blessing that lies in breaking. Though breaking is not easy, it is often necessary. Imagine a dilapidated house beyond repair. Even though exhaustive work will be required to tear it down, the possibility that lies in the newness of rebuilding is endless. Are you ready to put in the work? Your greatest life waits for you.

Alabama Band Plays Von Braun Center

St. Paul and the Broken Bones brought their tour to the Von Braun Center on Oct. 29. The tour stop, which is in support of their critically acclaimed sophomore album "Sea of Noise", marked their second time performing in the Rocket City. In 2015, the eight-member ensemble opened up for musical legend Elton John.

The band, originally from Birmingham, gave attendees a taste of South with its rich sounds and take-em-to-church energy.

Throughout the show, frontman Paul Janeway belted the band's extensive catalogue of soulful tunes, often taking his performances offstage. While the lead, Janeway didn't hog the stage, occasionally taking intermissions to showcase the impressive skills of his instrumentalists.
